Creating Agile Boundaries

Boundaries and systems bring people together into safe, symbiotic relationships. Boundaries and systems provide protection, mutuality, and support equality in relationships. Limited boundaries restrict our work as coaches because when our boundaries are particularly porous we take on others’ issues and when our boundaries are too rigid we run the risk of disconnecting. When our boundaries are agile, we are at our best.

Deepening Your Impact

BOUNDARIES AND SYSTEMS

Creating Agile Boundaries

Boundaries and systems bring people together into safe, symbiotic relationships. Boundaries and systems provide protection, mutuality, and support equality in relationships. Limited boundaries restrict our work as coaches because when our boundaries are particularly porous we take on others’ issues and when our boundaries are too rigid we run the risk of disconnecting. When our boundaries are agile, we are at our best.

What We’ll Cover

1: Boundary Self-Assessment

The following questions touch on the outer edges of where our individual boundaries start and stop, how crisp they are, or how much they absorb or hold at a distance the challenges and victories of others. This is where boundaries begin for us as coaches and leaders, as well.

- What do you know about your own boundary preferences? How much physical space do you like to have around you—your personal space?

- How clear are you on what you say yes to and what you say no to? Is it harder to say yes or no to some people more than others?

- Do you make decisions by going inside and checking your own rudder or are you often influenced by what others would like?

- Do you find it difficult to make time for yourself? How do you engage in self-care?

- Do you take your coachee’s issues and challenges home with you at the end of the day? How do your coachee’s issues affect your daily life?

- Do you sometimes feel angry or resentful about the time it takes to help another person?
Boundary Self-Assessment

Based on your previous questions, plot your position on the boundaries spectrum.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>DIFFUSE</th>
<th>AGILE</th>
<th>RIGID</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>boundaries are limited, porous, permeable, and become blurred or absorbed based on others.</td>
<td>boundaries are steadfast and strong but empathetic.</td>
<td>boundaries are highly rigid, unempathetic, unwavering.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>coach tends to collude, rescue, or fix the coachee.</td>
<td>coach can hold an alliance with the coachee and surface valuable observations without getting swept up.</td>
<td>coach is disconnected and limited with the coachee.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
2: Systems

We have all been impacted by our generational systems and familial relationships, which show up in differentiation orientation.

At your most differentiated self, you hold a belief that you are responsible for your own well-being, challenges, and messes. At the lowest level of differentiation, there is a belief that others are responsible for your well-being and sense or happiness and contentment in the world.

Check in on your own differentiation orientation.

To what extent do you rely on others for your own happiness, well-being, and contentment?

How did your family/root systems establish either a highly differentiated self or a lower level of differentiation?

Consider a few recent coaching engagements. Think of one in which you felt went particularly well and another that felt challenging. How do you think your boundaries and systems played into these instances?
3: Locating Your Boundaries

Which boundary type do you most identify with in your coaching engagements?

Highlight the experiences in the chart that are common for you. Remember, you might find that your boundaries and challenges vary and shift with different coachees.

If you have any tendencies in diffuse or rigid boundaries, how can you move toward agile boundaries in your coaching?

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>DIFFUSE</th>
<th>AGILE</th>
<th>RIGID</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>• I am immediately drawn into my coachee’s story and might not even notice it is occurring.</td>
<td>• In the midst of a compelling story, I am able to manage my own boundaries and observe from an unbiased perspective.</td>
<td>• I hear my coachee’s story, but don’t tap into how it might feel to walk in their shoes or how the experience might be for them.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>• I want to help by taking on whatever is troubling my coachee.</td>
<td>• I want to be of service by helping my coachee notice patterns and habits that need realigned.</td>
<td>• I am a bit detached from my coachee’s story and limited in my desire to want to help or carefully notice patterns and stories emerging.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>• When my coachee hurts, I hurt.</td>
<td>• When my coachee hurts, I notice and ask about it.</td>
<td>• When my coachee hurts, I might miss it.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>• When my coachee makes demands, I want to please.</td>
<td>• When my coachee makes demands, I notice if it is a pattern.</td>
<td>• When my coachee makes demands, I don’t particularly notice or slow down.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>• When my coachee complains, I commiserate.</td>
<td>• When my coachee complains, I notice the pattern of behavior and underlying need.</td>
<td>• When my coachee complains; I carry on or ignore.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>• If my coachee is chronically late for appointments, I adapt without saying anything.</td>
<td>• If my coachee is chronically late for appointments, after a few times, I bring it up to explore together and learn from this pattern.</td>
<td>• If my coachee is chronically late for appointments, I mention it and ask the coachee to be on time.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>• I notice my urge to help, fix, resolve, solve, or come to my coachee’s aid.</td>
<td>• I pay attention to both the feeling state and intellect of myself and my coachee.</td>
<td>• I am not tuned in to access my internal experience as much as I would like in coaching engagements.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
We often tend to place blame and insist that outside circumstances and sources outside of our control cause our problems.

When our boundaries are strong, it is easier to engage in systems thinking and imagine all parts of the system. In systems thinking, there is no one else to blame—you and the cause of your problems are part of a single system.

What is one outside circumstance you tend to blame as your “enemy” or source of your problems?

How can you shift to systems thinking instead? How will systems thinking help you overcome your old way of thinking and free your coaching engagements?

Peter Senge states that:
THE CURE LIES IN YOUR RELATIONSHIP WITH YOUR ‘ENEMY’.
5: Insights for Action Planning

Holistic Professional Development

As you are reading, reflecting on the “Out in Your World” questions, and completing the Coach’s Worksheets, begin to think of how you can leverage your whole, cultivated self to affect change in your future work.

What is one key insight you can take forward regarding boundaries and systems to contribute toward your overall self-development plan for coaching improvement?

How will establishing healthy boundaries and systems thinking help you do your best work towards affecting change as a coach or leader?

What is one thing you need to be able to create healthy boundaries and systems with your coachees?
More About Our Work at Hudson

About the Author
Pamela McLean, PhD, is the CEO and cofounder of Hudson Institute of Coaching, an organization providing a full suite of coaching services inside organizations and widely known as one of the leading coach training programs in the United States for over 30 years. McLean brings more than three decades of experience as a clinical and organizational psychologist, a master coach, coach supervisor, and leader and contributor in the field of coaching. McLean has written extensively and authored The Completely Revised Handbook of Coaching (2012) and LifeForward: Charting the Journey Ahead (2015).

About The Hudson Institute of Coaching
One of the early leaders in the field of coaching, Hudson Institute of Coaching has been providing developmentally based coach training for leaders for more than 30 years. We set the standard for experiential learning programs that lead organizations and people to reach for their best as leaders and human beings in our global world.

Download The Coach's Worksheets
More Self as Coach, Self as Leader worksheets are available at SelfasCoach.com.

Subscribe
Learn about our latest books, research and development programs by signing up for our free newsletter. Click here.

Contact Us
1.800.582.4401
info@hudsoninstitute.com